Introduction to the WA Planning System for the sport and recreation professional

Learn about urban and regional planning process.

Understand the implications.

Be a part of creating positive solutions.

The urban planning decision making process can be daunting for non-planning professionals, including those in the sport and recreation industry. However, a lack of engagement of sport and recreation and open space professionals has led to a system that fails to respond to the needs of existing and emerging communities.

To assist non-planning professionals to understand and become involved in the urban planning decision making process, the Department of Sport and Recreation is running an interactive training workshop conducted by Professor David Hedgcock and Associate Professor Garry Middle from Curtin University's Urban and Regional Planning Department.

This Leading workshop will provide participants with:

- Understanding of the WA planning system
- Knowledge of planning processes as they apply to both metropolitan and regional WA
- An insight into how you may have influence on the system
- An excellent networking opportunity
